Article I

Recognizing the Vienna Convention of 1963, the Nations, mentioned in the Preamble, agree to open diplomatic missions of each other, such as Embassies and if considered necessary, Consulates; physical or virtual, in venues, suitable for both of them; such Embassies shall be created by the Foreign Ministries or substituting them institutions of both countries; diplomats shall be nominated for the work in these missions via agreement between the Governments of both countries.

Article II

1. Communications between the diplomats of both countries shall be taking place primarily through diplomatic missions, mentioned in the Article 1; conflicts, occurring in the middle of such communications, shall be dealt with through non-public dialogue.
2. All correspondences between both countries shall be considered as confidential except any that both parties have decided to be public.
3. Communications between the diplomats of both countries shall be made only in English language and will be made in a manner of mutual respect.

Article III

1. The Parties recognize each other's countries as sovereign and independent entities; the legitimacy of documents, issued by those; honorary citizenship and noble titles, passable in both countries.
2. Both Parties shall recognize the noble titles in both countries and will use them respectively.

Article IV

This Treaty envisages the existence of mutually beneficial contacts and collaborations, development of bilateral dialogue in cultural, social and humanitarian fields. Agreements, stating the conditions of such contacts and collaborations, can be signed independently or as an addition to this Treaty.

Article V

In case of violation of this Treaty by either side, the signatories are to discuss the situation through diplomatic dialogue; failing this, the treaty shall be considered as void.

Article VI

1. That the title of Pavlovian Emperor and Autocrat of the Romans and all Rus' is rightfully held by His Imperial Majesty Emperor Oleksandr IV of the House of Tezdzhan-Smahin and his legitimate successors under Pavlovian law, and that those who hold the right to the title of Emperor of the Romans are the Pavlovian Emperors and those they recognise as holding said right.
2. Recognition of other Emperors shall not mean a de facto or tacit recognition, but instead the "Emperors" in question are to be recognized solely as of the Caesarian rank, not as a Augustus.

Article VII
This Treaty is signed for two years with the possibility of extension, initiated by the parties; can be a subject of amendment, by the agreement of both Parties; can be terminated by either Party with prior notification, not later than 2 (two) weeks before the planned date of termination.
